These discussions about developing the waterfront are going to benefit only one segment of Seattle's population: Developers. Every day, Seattle is looking more like a tourist attraction, rather than a liveable city. The glitzy new library we really didn't need, the design of which is enough to give me nightmares. The new City Hall complex is another boondoggle: a plush playground for bureaucrats who have nothing better to do than tear down what used to be a beautiful city. Now, you want to tear down a structure that has stood for over 40 years, and will stand for another 40, with a little shoring up. The inconvenience that will be caused to commuters of the viaduct will be profound. The seawall and underground transportation corridor being considered is ludicrous (sp?). I am sick to death of City Hall ruining my city. Can't you people find some other pet project? Maybe in the Central Area? Or, better yet, back east somewhere. Far, far away, in any event. Darlene Cox
